GSIB1: Disclosure of G-SIB indicators

Every year, a sample of international banks must provide information to the Basel Committee for Banking Supervision (BCBS) for assessment against a set of indicators that identify potential Global Systemically Important Banks (G-SIBs). Banks above a cut-off score are identified as G-SIBs and are subject to higher loss absorbency (HLA) capital requirement and G-SIB Pillar 3 disclosures.

No Australian bank has been classified as a G-SIB, however Australia and New Zealand Banking Group Limited, Commonwealth Bank of Australia, National Australia Bank Limited and Westpac Banking Corporation Limited have been designated as Domestic Systemically Important Banks (D-SIB) by APRA and are required to hold an additional 1% HLA buffer and to publish their G-SIB indicators annually using the ADI's financial year-end data. ANZ's most recent reporting date was 30 September 2024. The table below shows the twelve indicators that are used to identify potential G-SIBs as required in APS 330, using information as at 30 September 2024.
